Taj Mahal, Agra, India and Bengal Tiger

Sublimely reflected in the pool, this inspiring monument was built between 1631 and 1654 by thousands of artisans for the Mughal Emperor Shah Jahan as a mausoleum for his dead wife Mumtaz Mahal. Blending Islamic, Indian, Turkish and Persian elements, it is built entirely of white marble, decorated with precious gems, with a huge central dome. The Bengal tiger is found all over India and is one of the world's largest and most awesome predators.

Amalfi, Italy
and Loggerhead Sea Turtle

On a dazzling stretch of coast with dramatic grottos, cliffs, shimmering bays and small villages perched between the mountains and the sea, Amalfi lies at the mouth of a deep ravine. It was a major Mediterranean maritime trading power from 839-1200 and later a popular early 20th century winter resort. The Amalfi coast is famed for its cultivation of lemons and production of Limoncello liqueur. Loggerhead turtles surround the waters off the coast.

Chefchaouen, Morocco and Northern Bald Ibis

A winding stepped alleyway with flowerpots in Chefchaouen, where the buildings of the Medina or old town are painted in shades of pale to bright blue, a tradition started by Jewish immigrants in the 1930s. This attractive city, founded in 1471, has narrow lanes converging on the kasbah or fortress and the large central square, set against the striking backdrop of the Rif Mountains. Most of the endangered northern bald ibis remain in Morocco.

In the foothills of Mont Ventoux where Chamois can be seen on the steep slopes, the peaceful hill village of Aurel with its picturesque narrow streets and squares is surrounded by immense fields of lavender. It has inspired artists for centuries for the quality of its light and the colours of the purple lavender and golden corn fields. The 12th century church is crowned by a square bell tower and there are the remains of a 12th century château.

Twelve Apostles, Victoria, Australia and Possum

These dramatic limestone sea stacks formed by erosion stand offshore in the Port Campbell National Park, though there are only eight remaining. Pristine sandy beaches framed by steep cliffs, arches, caves and blowholes created by erosion by the wind and the ocean are a feature of the coastline along the Great Ocean Road, a breathtaking scenic highway. Ringtail and brushtail possums are small nocturnal marsupials that can be seen in the trees nearby.

Navy Pier, Chicago, Illinois, USA
and North American Beaver

This Chicago landmark opened in 1916 as a docking and storage facility for passenger and freight ships with entertainment facilities. In 1941 it became a training centre for the US Navy. It was remodelled in 1995 as a major entertainment hub in the city with a giant ferris wheel, theatre and stages, IMAX cinema, museum, restaurants and cruises on Lake Michigan. Beavers inhabit rivers and streams across Illinois, building dams for protection.
